Challenges Addressed

- The needs of nonprofit organizations vary widely due to the type, age and size of organizations as well as external factors influencing the nonprofit environment. Because of these differences, Management Improvement Fund grants offset the expenses of a variety of capacity-building activities, including organizational assessments, strategic planning, and board development.
- Many nonprofit organizations struggle financially to raise enough revenue for their programs to serve low-income individuals and families and don't have the financial resources to pay for much needed professional consultation and technical services. Management Improvement Fund grants to nonprofit organizations help them stay strong and healthy, paying dividends to the communities they serve.

Activities Funded

The Management Improvement Fund makes grants for technical assistance and consultation to help improve the capacity and management of nonprofit organizations. Examples of these activities include but are not limited to:

- Organizational assessment
- Strategic planning
- Organizational restructuring / merger / dissolution
- Collaboration between groups and organizations
- Board development / governance
- Human resources / personnel assessment
- Marketing and Communications assessment
- Financial planning management

- Organization annual operating budgets of $5 million or less.
- Organizations must serve a significant number of low-income persons.
- They can document that they are in strong need of the technical assistance through consultation.
